BIOGRAPHY

Hailing from the faraway continent of Osse, Liz grew up living a carefree childhood on the western coast. She descends from a tiefling family of spirit shamans who have largely abandoned their infernal ancestry. Liz was not one of the auspicious few who were born with the constitution to be a spirit shaman, but this meant she had the freedom to explore nature as she pleased during her formative years, not tied down to the education that would come with the position of shaman.

It was during one of her many solo forages into the surrounding nature that Liz stumbled upon a dilapidated temple. Eventually, she wandered into a room that was likely the ceremonial hall. Thirsty, she drank from a pool of water before a shrine. It was at this moment that she awakened a powerful being only known as The Fisherman. Unstable from the passages of time, the temple began to collapse from the god's revival. The Fisherman proposed a pact with Liz to prevent her from being buried alive. Liz accepted this connection immediately, as she was not willing to die and had no time to spare. For better or for worse, Liz became the host to The Fisherman's connection to Toril.

Liz successfully kept this a secret for a few years, fearing condemnation from her family. When the secret was inevitably spilled, she was surprised that instead of disgust, her parents encouraged to embark on a "spirit walk" that lead many of the other spirit shamans out of Osse to the more familiar continents. At 17, Liz left Osse to Faerun. Having grown up in a society that was very different to the hustle and bustle of the Neverwinter coast, her most difficult challenge was integrating into such a vastly unfamiliar society, something she still finds herself learning to this day. For one, tieflings were seen equally in Osse, and Liz had to learn the hard way of her species' reputation in foreign lands.

Liz carried her experience of traversing nature with her, earning coin as a guide in the more harsher parts of the land. During her travels, she met and befriended Sabre and Gundren on separate occasions.

As to why Liz has decided to take on Gundren's commission? To understand that, one first has to understand Liz's relationship with The Fisherman. It is not typical of a cleric, and even the title of "cleric" is loose at best. The Fisherman plays both the role of the angel and devil on Liz's shoulders, though He tends to play the role of the latter most of the time. To Liz, The Fisherman more akin to a fly in her ear; a fly that provides unnecessary commentary, makes inscrutable requests, but occasionally provides some very helpful foresight. If you were to ask Liz about it, she would likely smile and say something along the lines of being "business partners" (on a good day) or "cellmates" (on a bad day). Liz took on Gundren's commission as a convenient way of travel to Phandalin, but perhaps The Fisherman seems to have some interest in Phandalin too....
